Bless This Land

A new kind of christening

By Ellen Snortland
LA Downtown News Columnist

The day was clear, cloudless and hot beneath a powdery blue sky as my friends and I stood on the land where our Altadena home once stood. In response to an email invitation I had sent in late May, people came from the neighborhood and all over the city. We welcomed friends from our All Saints choir, my writing classes, Landmark, Ken's Macintosh user group days, my theater career, our grief and loss recovery group, my 12-step friends and more. The email read:

"Dear friends and family,

The Rev. Tim Rich, the priest in charge at All Saints Episcopal Church in Pasadena, will conduct a blessing over our property on Wednesday, June 11, at 4 p.m. Ken and I would be honored if you could join us and lend your support as we begin again. Please bring something tiny, like a penny, to leave on our property. It can be a charm, or anything you can imagine that will leave future archaeologists scratching their heads! Love, Ellen and Ken. P.S. If this is too triggering or weird for you, I understand. You don't have to be Episcopalian (we aren't) to participate in this ceremony. You can be of any faith, including no faith, undecided or Wiccan... doesn't matter."

Many of us Altadenans are feeling a fresh wave of sorrow since the fires, myself included. It's as if we were sleepwalking through the initial months. Now, at the six-month mark, our fog has lifted, and our hearts are breaking anew. Experts warn us that this grief may last for years. Duly warned.

A few weeks ago, when I heard our beloved Rector talk about blessing a parishioner's burned-out property, I burst into tears. I realized we needed that, too. I knew we were selfishly asking Rev. Rich for his attention during such a nationally nightmarish time, given the military presence in our city and elsewhere. However, I also knew that our ceremony would serve as a proxy for so many of us — an opportunity for much-needed healing — so we forged ahead.

Being a theater geek at heart, almost anything I do has to have a ritual or theatrical aspect; this ceremony had both. To start, I read what I'd written aloud from a printed page, as I could barely hold my emotions together. "We've gathered because we need to acknowledge our grief and trauma, no matter the source. While today might seem like a ceremony for one piece of land, we're really mourning the broader losses: loss of human life, over 6,000 homes gone, a community changed forever, wildlife lost — deer, bobcats, mountain lions, birds — and the destruction of Altadena's cherished urban forest with thousands of years of tree growth gone overnight."

After my remarks, our white female architect, Cole Butler, read the land acknowledgement (take that, DEI enemies!) For the people who can't accept that we stole already occupied land from the Tongva-Gabrieleno people, please occupy somewhere else.

Then we took a show of hands of how many people in attendance had been impacted by the wildfires. Everyone raised their hands, whether because their own home burned down or family and friends' houses had been gobbled up by the voracious fire sparked by the greedy, criminally negligent Southern California Edison.

Rev. Rich had us take turns reading a service in a "call and response" style that he had prepared and printed, which included a "Litany of Lament." All the paragraphs touched me, but especially the one that read: "Guide us to be responsible stewards of your creation, to care for the earth and all living beings with reverence and compassion. Grant us the wisdom to make choices that protect

LA Stands Against ICE

'City of dreams' protests federal immigration enforcement

By Alicia Venter

LA Downtown News Staff Writer

When the Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) launched raids in several Southern California communities on June 6, Angelenos swiftly took to the streets in protests for its status as a sanctuary city. Over a week later, protests continue throughout a city under curfew, facing Marines and the National Guard in a battle between federal law and state sovereignty.

Though the official number remains unclear, the White House on June 11 said that 330 immigrants had been arrested in Los Angeles since ICE raids began on June 6.

Tens of thousands of Angelenos have protested in the streets since the raids began on local businesses across LA. Some have used the protests for vandalism and attacks against police vehicles and officers.

President Donald Trump has repeatedly supported and defended the ICE raids and has activated the National Guard and U.S. Marines for maintaining order as they ensue.

The clash between Gov. Gavin Newsom and Trump, through interviews, briefings and social media, has been nonstop since the raids began. Trump has said he would support the arrest of Newsom and Mayor Karen Bass after border czar Tom Homan said he would arrest anyone who obstructs enforcement. Both Newsom and Bass have called for the federal government to stop ICE raids in Southern California.

Newsom dared Trump to arrest him in an interview with MeidasTouch, a liberal activist media group, on June 9.

"I told the president, just get it over with, arrest me, move on," Newsom said. "If you need some head to scalp, do it with me — but stop messing with these kids."

Newsom sued Trump's use of the National Guard and, on June 12, District Judge Charles Breyer said Trump's guard activation violated the 10th Amendment of the Constitution, ordering them returned to Newsom's control by the following day. However, a few hours later, an appeals court put the order on hold until a hearing on Tuesday, June 17. Until then, they will continue under Trump's command facing protesters in Downtown LA, as of the weekend.

"Destroying not only the foundations of our democracy, the best again of the Roman Republic and Greek Democracy, but now our economy is at risk because of the recklessness and cruelty of Donald Trump," Newsom said on June 12. "The indiscriminate cruelty of Donald Trump."

The city has an 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew in effect, and as of June 10, the LAPD is on "tactical alert," activating a departmentwide operational posture, allowing for the reallocation of officers rapidly, holdover shifts as needed and prioritizing major incidents. It's also extended watch hours, deferred days off and alerted off-duty officers for potential deployment. LAPD Chief Jim McDonnell has disputed the claim that the department wants the National Guard in Los Angeles.

"Our priority is simple," McDonnell said during a June 10 press conference. "Keep both the public and law enforcement officers safe and to maintain order. To the public, we fully support your right to peacefully protest, but let me be absolutely clear: Those who choose to incite violence, engage in vandalism or graffiti, and/or attack officers will be arrested. There is no tolerance for criminal activity under the guise of protest."

Alongside Newsom's stalwart opposition, Bass has also called for the end of immigration raids in Los Angeles. In a press conference on June 12, she stood with more than 100 labor, immigrant rights, business and community groups, calling Los Angeles a "city of dreamers" and denouncing claims that "our city is a city of mayhem."

"If you support the immigrant community, you know how to do it in a peaceful manner," Bass said. "We are proud to say that we have well-established, well-respected immigrant rights organizations that have been holding protests for years and years that have never devolved into violence. To characterize what is going on as our city is a city of mayhem is just an outright lie. I'm not going to call it an untruth. I'm not going to sugarcoat it. I'm going to call it for what it is, which is a lie."

The day before, she was joined by more than 20 mayors and local officials from across Southern California, calling for an end to federal immigration raids throughout the region. The federal government is trying to cause fear and panic, she said, when it raids Home Depots and workplaces, tears parents and children apart and deploys troops in the street.

The belief was echoed by Mayor Peggy Lemons of Paramount, who called the raids a "shameful destruction of people's lives who have been here for decades," and Mayor Arturo Flores of Huntington Park, stating "militarized immigration enforcement has no place in our neighborhoods."

The federal government is presenting what is happening in Los Angeles as "un-American," per Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem, calling protestors "thugs" at a press conference on June 12. She, alongside acting ICE director Todd Lyons, told the press stories how ICE arrested gang members who killed two people during botched catalytic converter thefts and of a man who committed a mass shooting at a graduation party in 1994. At the same press conference, Sen. Alex Padilla was forcibly removed and handcuffed after interrupting Noem.

ICE Raids continue in LA, as do the protests them. Now, the protests have grown across the country. Over the weekend, "No Kings" protests were held throughout the United States, taking place to counter Trump's policies and actions on his birthday, June 14.

LA Stands Against ICE

The sweeping arrests against undocumented citizens by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) have been met with large-scale protests across the city of Los Angeles. Photographer Chris Mortenson was on the ground to capture images of the action during the first few days of the ongoing unrest, prompting President Donald Trump to federalize and deploy California's National Guard to assist LAPD, as well as bringing in 700 active-duty Marines to the area.

The first wave of criminal charges against violent offenders during protests over immigration enforcement were announced Wednesday as local authorities continue their attempts to curb violence as the protests entered a sixth day in downtown Los Angeles and other parts of Southern California.

The announcement of charges came a day after Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass issued a curfew in part of downtown from 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. to prevent violence, vandalism and looting that had victimized businesses in previous days. That curfew may continue for the next several days.

Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass and officials from more than a dozen other cities in L.A. County banded together on Wednesday, offering a unified message to President Donald Trump and his administration: End the immigration raids and stop sowing unnecessary fear in our communities.

The city leaders, many of them mayors, who gathered for a joint news conference "reflect the concerns that are going on in our communities right now," Bass said, leading off the event.

California's school funding is in jeopardy

Trump administration threatens to withhold money due to state's policy on transgender athletes

By Molly Gibbs
MGBIBBS@
BAYAREANEWSGROUP.COM

The Trump administration is considering withholding federal education funding to California schools over the state's policies on transgender athletes, U.S. Education Secretary Linda McMahon said Tuesday, contending California's policy of allowing athletes to participate in sports consistent with their gender identity violates federal law.

"I think that is part of what we found with the state of California just blatantly refusing to be in compliance with Title IX regulations," McMahon said at an event hosted by Bloomberg News. "So that is one of the tools and the other options that we have with California and I think it's right that we make them aware that that is a risk that they run."

The threat comes as the feud between Gov. Gavin Newsom and President Donald Trump escalates over the president's deployment of the National Guard and Marines to Los Angeles to stop immigration-related protests.

Politico first reported the Trump administration was considering stopping the disbursement of "formula funds" — education funds distributed to schools based on a predetermined formula created by Congress — to California's schools. Those funds are used for a variety of programs and purposes, including support of low-income students and students with disabilities, assistance to rural schools and financial relief due to emergencies or natural disasters.

California received about $8 billion in federal funding for K-12 education and about $7 billion in federal funding for higher education in 2024. The state received $1.5 billion in special education funding from the federal government for the 2024-25 school year and more than $2.5 billion in Title I funds, which support socioeconomically disadvantaged students, $77 million for career and technical education programs and nearly $6 million for nutrition services for the 2024-25 fiscal year.

"The Trump administration's favorite pastime is threatening to illegally pull funding from states that don't conform to the President's political ideology," the California Department of Education said in a statement Wednesday. "California and other states have fought these actions in court and the administration has been repeatedly blocked. We will continue to fight to make sure that our tax dollars go where they are intended — to fund education programs that our children deserve."

The nonprofit California Budget and Policy Center estimated California residents and businesses contribute $83 billion more than the state receives in federal support. California paid nearly $700 billion in federal taxes for the 2022 fiscal year, Newsom's office said.

Tony Thurmond, the state superintendent of public instruction, has said the Trump administration cannot pull California's federal education funding without Congressional approval.

It is not the first time the Trump administration has threatened to pull federal funding from the state over its policies related to transgender students. In March, the administration initiated an investigation into the state's education department over a controversial gender notification law the state passed last summer, asserting that it encouraged schools to conceal information from parents about their children's sexuality and warning that California could lose billions of dollars in federal funding.

The administration also announced a federal Title IX review of the California Interscholastic Federation (CIF), the state's governing body for high school athletics, over California's policies on transgender athletes.

In May, Trump himself threatened "large-scale" funding cuts to the state if a Southern California transgender high school athlete who qualified for the state track and field championship was allowed to compete. The CIF allowed the athlete, AB Hernandez, to compete, but amended its policy so that girls who would have qualified if not for Hernandez were also allowed to compete and share the podium with Hernandez. It is unclear whether the Trump administration has engaged with CIF about its rule changes for the state track final. A CIF spokesperson did not immediately respond to a request for comment Wednesday.

Additionally, San Jose State University faced national scrutiny after the co-captain of its women's volleyball team joined a lawsuit in September accusing the NCAA of discriminating against women by allowing transgender women to compete in women's sports. The school is currently under a federal investigation over a potential civil rights violation for allowing a transgender athlete to compete on a women's team.

California schools also received a letter last week from the U.S. Department of Justice warning schools they are "exposed to legal liability" if they comply with CIF's policy allowing all students to participate in sports consistent with their gender identity, according to the California Department of Education. Thurmond said the state Education Department would respond to the DOJ letter on behalf of all California schools.

In a statement last week, he said the state will continue to follow California law, which protects all students' access to participate in a sports consistent with their gender identity.

"Let's be clear: sending a letter does not change the law. The DOJ's letter to school districts does not announce any new federal law, and state law on this issue has remained unchanged since 2013," Thurmond said.

Michael Nowels contributed reporting for this story.

A California judge Tuesday refused to grant Gov. Gavin Newsom's request for a temporary restraining order to block the Trump administration's deployment of federalized state National Guard troops and Marines to Southern California.

Instead, U.S. District Judge Charles R. Breyer, who was appointed by former President Bill Clinton, set a hearing for Thursday.

Newsom is asking the court to stop the Trump administration's mobilization of troops amid large demonstrations that have broken out over the past few days to protest federal immigration enforcement operations in the area.

The Trump administration on Sunday federalized California's National Guard, mobilizing more than 4,000 troops to Los Angeles to respond to the protests over immigration enforcement efforts. The president also ordered some 700

State Senate tries to save the bullet train

The Trump administration has notified the California High Speed Rail Authority of a "proposed determination to terminate" two federal grant agreements totaling approximately $4 billion, money that was awarded by previous administrations to fund the bullet train.

"This commitment was made in reliance on assurances from CHSRA that the CHSR Project could be delivered," Federal Railroad Administration Acting Administrator Drew Feeley wrote in a June 4 letter to rail authority CEO Ian Choudri. "These assurances proved illusory."

Did they ever.

"FRA is not alone in realizing CHSRA is unable to deliver the Project," Feeley wrote, citing the rail authority's own inspector general's report in February, which identified a $7 billion gap in the funding necessary to complete the Central Valley Segment. The gap has since grown to more than $10 billion.

FRA's review of the project's compliance with the terms of the grant agreements identified patterns of "broken promises," "unattainable proposals" and "unrealistic assumptions" regarding deadlines, ridership projections and budget deficiencies.

The original 2008 ballot measure that launched the project provided for nearly $10 billion in state bonds. Voters were assured that the project would attract private investors, which never happened. The measure also stated that the high-speed rail project could not be built with a tax increase and could not be operated with a public subsidy.

Now California lawmakers face a stark choice: end the project, or find a loophole to raise taxes to pay for it. Gov. Gavin Newsom and legislative leaders have ruled out the first and are trying the second.

Currently the bullet train is funded with 25% of the revenue from the tax-equivalent cap-and-trade program, a regulatory invention run by the California Air Resources Board. Oil refineries, utilities and manufacturers must buy permits to emit greenhouse gases (in other words, to operate). The cost is passed through to consumers as higher prices for gasoline, electricity and goods that are made or transported in the state.

So far, state courts have held that the permit requirement is not a tax, but it's close enough that legislative leaders have decided that renewing the program, which expires in 2030, will require a two-thirds vote like any other tax increase. Newsom has announced that he would like the bullet train to receive $1 billion per year from the program. The legislature may have other plans for the money.

But canceling the bullet train and allowing the costly cap-and-trade program to expire would significantly reduce the cost of living in California by cutting the price of energy and everything that uses energy. That's not on the table in Sacramento. Instead, the Senate just passed Senate Bill 545, which would require a $700,000 study on how local taxes could be raised to pay for the high-speed rail project.

The study would "assess funding potential across a variety of funding mechanisms that can support the high-speed rail capital program or discrete system elements." These so-called "funding mechanisms" could include fees charged to developers in exchange for density bonuses and permitting "efficiencies." The study would also "identify available air rights around stations" for "value capture opportunities."

These are taxes by another name. No. Just no.

There's no credible path to completing even part of this project. The Assembly should kill SB 545 and the governor should kill the bullet train.

Trump's latest travel ban lacks real justification

Karen Bass puts career on line for illegal immigration

Susan Shelley
COLUMNIST

The answer to the violence and vandalism going on in Los Angeles, Mayor Karen Bass insisted during a news conference on Tuesday morning, "is for the federal government to stop the raids."

It's my sincere wish for all humans on earth to have someone in their lives who loves them as much as Mayor Karen Bass loves illegal immigration.

"I want to tell him to stop the raids," she said in answer to a question about what she would say to President Donald Trump if she spoke with him on the phone. "I want to tell him that we are a city of immigrants."

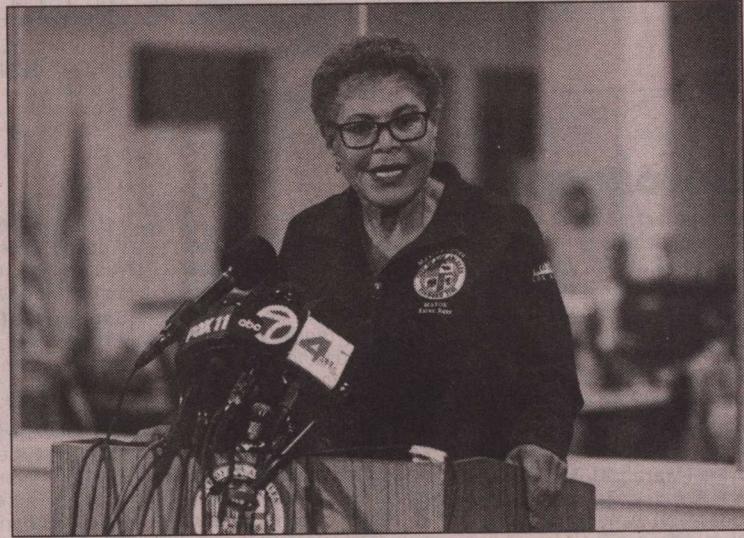

Los Angeles is also a city in the United States, where the federal government can enforce federal law, and not just immigration law. "Border czar" Tom Homan told MSNBC on Monday that three criminal warrants were served on a business in the downtown fashion district as the result of a multi-agency investigation into suspected money laundering, tax evasion and customs fraud. "The Fashion District wasn't an immigration raid," Homan said.

But immigrants' rights organizations have formed a "Rapid Response Network" that spreads the word of any sighting of any federal officers. Bass said she learns of "raids" from this network.

Did you hear about the car wash "raids" this week? Local government officials raced to the microphones to fear-monger that ICE was going to car washes to tear families apart.

But last month in New Orleans, the district attorney announced the seizure of a car wash following a months-long investigation by Homeland Security Investigations, the New Orleans Police Department Special Operations Division and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives. The car wash, the D.A. said, was a front for "criminal activities" such as alleged drug activity and trafficking.

But California Democratic politicians are filtering every federal law enforcement activity through their "stop the raids" lens. The story they want to tell is that President Trump is needlessly disturbing the idyllic conditions in California's perfectly calm cities because he is, in Gov. Gavin Newsom's words, "reckless" and "immoral."

On Monday, Newsom and Attorney General Rob Bonta filed a press release disguised as a lawsuit asserting that the president has taken the supposedly illegal and unconstitutional action of federalizing the National Guard without the governor's permission. The president doesn't need the governor's permission.

It's no secret that Trump has gained significant political support from Latino voters, something that Democrats would like to reverse with their attacks on the president.

But what is a secret is the funding of the actions on the streets. On June 6, Mayor Bass said in a statement, "My Office is in close coordination with immigrant rights community organizations. We will not stand for this."

Who funds these organizations that "will not stand" for the enforcement of federal law?

Mayor Bass has filed legally required reports of behested payments — donations made because she specifically requested them — that show dark money changing hands. For example, more than 70 separate contributions were made in January totaling $798,864 from the Pledging Foundation, a donor-advised fund masking the name of the donor, to California Community Foundation, which states on its website that immigration is one of its areas of focus. The site states in a section labeled Our Strategic Priority Projects, "CCF supported the establishment of the Immigrants Are LA Coalition, which, in 2021, successfully secured over $160M from the American Rescue Plan to aid immigrant programs."

On March 31, Bass "behested" a $425,000 donation from California Community Foundation to Community Partners, which provides "fiscal sponsorships" to nonprofits working for "equitable, just and vibrant communities." Its website features a photo of protesters holding signs that read, "Immigration is an LGBT Issue."

In 2021, the California Fair Political Practices Commission issued a new regulation requiring public officials reporting behested payments to disclose the original donor of contributions made by a donor-advised fund, but that doesn't seem to be happening.

What's happening is that people are secretly making tax-deductible contributions at the request of the mayor to fund community organizations that promote the interests of illegal immigrants.

If the IRS Criminal Division ever takes an interest in the L.A. riots, they might follow the money to some surprising doorsteps.

How soon they forget. If these protesters are against the ICE raids and continue to say that illegal immigrants should be considered "part of the community," why are they displaying Mexican flags? This is the U.S., not Mexico. Do you really think this helps your cause or maybe promotes more animosity against your cause? If you want to be considered part of the community, maybe you should be carrying around the American flag. Your coverage of the L.A. riots caught my attention because of the photos. I couldn't help but notice some were missing. The protesters were quite violent at times. If you are going to cover these kinds of happenings please show both sides. Not everyone actually reads the articles. What to do if ICE agents show up at your home

Amid rising immigration enforcement, here are rights that protect families

By Teresa Liu
TLIU@SCNG.COM

Immigration enforcement activities across Los Angeles and Orange County in recent days have sparked protests and heightened fear among some immigrant families. This quick guide, based on information gathered from legal and advocacy groups, outlines their rights, what ICE can and can't do, and what residents can do if agents come to their door.

AGENTS IN HOME?

You do not have to open the doors unless agents present a judicial warrant that includes your full name and address and is signed by a judge or a magistrate.

An ICE Administrative

Santa Ana Councilman Johnathan Ryan Hernandez tells the crowd, "These streets belong to us" as he gathers with protesters at the Federal Building in Santa Ana on Monday. JEFF GRITCHEN — STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Warrant (often labeled Form I-200 or I-205) is signed by an ICE officer, not a judge, and does not give agents the authority to enter your car or vehicle. "Oftentimes ICE only carries administrative warrants, and these warrants are not reviewed by a judge, or not signed by a judge, and the standard for executing administrative warrant is much lower than a judicial warrant," Stephanie Padilla, staff attorney at the ACLU Foundation of Southern California, said Tuesday.

According to ACLU, you can ask the officer to slide the warrant under the door or hold it against the window so you can review it without opening the door.

If the warrant is valid, you have the right to remain silent, according to the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California. ACLU suggests that if you choose to speak, step outside and close the door.

What are your rights if ICE comes to your home?

Citizens and noncitizens are protected by the U.S. Constitution.

- You have the right to remain silent.
- You do not have to open the door without a judicial warrant.
- You have the right to speak to an attorney before answering questions or signing anything.
- You have the right to refuse to sign documents without legal counsel.
- If ICE agents forcibly enter your home, do not resist physically, remain calm and silent, according to the Immigrant Defenders Law Center.

What should you do if ICE wants to talk to you?

- Stay calm. Do not run or interfere with officers.

- You can say: "I do not wish to speak to you."
- If you're outside your home, you can ask: "Am I being detained?" If the answer is no, then ask: "Am I free to leave?"
- Do not lie or present false documents, as this is considered a crime.

A resource for families: know-your-rights cards:

- To support immigrant families, organizations like Los Angeles Unified School District have distributed red cards — small, wallet-sized, know-your-rights cards that explain what to do during an encounter with immigration enforcement.
- The cards, created by the Immigrant Legal Resource Center (ILRC), are available in multiple languages and can be used by both citizens and noncitizens.

How can families prepare?

- Create a family preparedness plan

(childcare, emergency contacts, etc.)

- Keep important documents (IDs, passports, medical info) in a safe, accessible place.
- Let neighbors or trusted friends know how to help in case someone is detained.
- Share know-your-rights materials with everyone in the household.

Where can you get help or legal assistance in Los Angeles?

L.A. County supervisors pushing back against federal immigration raids

By Steve Scauzillo
SSCAUZILLO@SCNG.COM

The Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors are taking steps to push back against recent federal immigration raids in L.A. County, including exploring ways to keep federal authorities from using county properties and to help those residents detained in sweeping raids.

In an urgency motion authored by Supervisor Hilda Solis on Tuesday, the county will provide support and information about civil rights to about 45 individuals detained by the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement suspected of immigration law violations arrested during recent raids in Paramount, Compton, Westlake, Cypress Park, South L.A. and Downtown L.A.

These include providing mental health, workforce development and public benefits to those detained and their families.

The motion, approved by 4-0 vote, with Supervisor Kathryn Barger absent, elaborates that the supervisors are directing its County Counsel to prevent county properties with public access to be used by federal immigration enforcement activities and "preventing commandeering their use."

Another section directs the County Counsel to join as an amicus or friend of the court brief in the state of California's case, Gov. Gavin Newsom vs. President Donald J. Trump, et al., which claims Trump's ordering of California National Guard to the streets of L.A. to combat violent protesters was an illegal act.

Supervisor Lindsey Horvath said the National Guard troops have no authority to enforce the law. That is the responsibility of local law enforcement. Neither the LAPD nor the L.A. County Sheriff's Department asked for federal help.

And the National Guard, and also the ordering of 700 active Marines to be at the ready by President Trump, only made the situation worse, said the supervisors, by drawing out more protesters and anarchist agitators who threw rocks at police officers and set a few self-driving cars on fire.

"I've watched in disbelief and horror as this president has chosen to attack our most vulnerable neighborhoods," Horvath said.

Regarding raids this past weekend at the Home Depot parking lot in the city of Paramount, Hahn said a councilmember was shot in the leg with a rubber bullet and other city and state leaders were hit by tear gas fired from soldiers of the National Guard.

"Running through Home Depot parking lots with guns drawn, chasing people who were there just to earn a living," Hahn described ICE officers. "This huge overreach on these raids was only the first troubling incident. Then, he called into our towns the California National Guard. I feel like we've been invaded by our own government."

Supervisor Holly Mitchell said she was angry at the raids carried out with armed personnel in camouflage in areas where Latino and Black residents live and work, some of whom are undocumented. "I have anger, and horror at the racist and cruel escalation by the federal administration this past weekend. The fear has rippled across every corner of the county."

Dozens of speakers said many Latino residents are terrified, afraid to venture outdoors, go to the market, or to work. Many have not attended promotion and/or graduation ceremonies for fear of being arrested. Some schools have made accommodations for them to watch remotely.

Solis said many parents called her office to say many students are not attending promotion or graduation ceremonies. Instead, a livestreamed telecast will be made available, reminiscent of when crowds were not permitted during the height of the Covid pandemic five years ago, she said.

Raymond Andry, superintendent of Mountain View School District in El Monte, told the board that some families called his office to inform the school that they will not be attending their children's promotion ceremonies.

José Miguel Ruiz, with the county's Commission for Children and Families, said three families were arrested from the Ambiance Apparel were immigrants that were detained, he said during the meeting. "There is no due process. No protocol," he said.

Horvath said the community, including the supervisors themselves, will speak out peacefully. "We will continue to peacefully dissent when power is abused. It is clear there are better ways to keep our communities safe. That starts with care, compassion and protection of our most vulnerable," she said.

State's political parties at odds over response to upheaval following immigration raids

Democrats decry lack of access to detention centers; Republicans blast violence, mayhem on streets of L.A.

By Linh Tat
LTAT@SCNG.COM

As protests over federal immigration sweeps entered a fifth day in Southern California, Democrats and Republicans representing California in Congress have responded in different ways.

Democrats are demanding answers as to why they've been denied entry into federal detention centers, despite the law granting them access.

GOP House members, on the other hand, have condemned the organiare living in. They said they have heard reports of alleged "inhumane" conditions, such as being placed in basement holding cells for up to 24 hours without food, water or sunlight.

As members of Congress, these elected officials are allowed to enter DHS facilities to conduct oversight. They do not need to provide advance notice, according to guidelines on the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement website.

But Rep. Jimmy Gomez of Los Angeles posted on social media that he and fellow Democratic Reps. Luz Rivas of Pacoima, Norma Torres of Pomona and Lou Correa of Santa Ana were denied entrance to a facility in downtown L.A. on Saturday.

Gomez returned to the site on Monday, but was "denied denial of entry and on what grounds, and for DHS to fully comply with the law at every DHS facility in the country.

A DHS spokesperson did not respond to a request for comment on Tuesday about Gomez's letter and the various accounts by legislators that they were prohibited from entering detention centers this past weekend.

Reps. Judy Chu, D-Pasadena; Gil Cisneros, D-Covina and Derek Tran, D-Orange, said they were met with padlocks when they went to the Adelanto ICE Processing Center in the high desert over the weekend.

Chu, who had returned to Washington, D.C., by early this week, said in an interview Monday that she would try again to enter the facility at a later date.

"It was unlawful for them

"riots" or "insurrections." Democrats have pushed back on such forceful language, though they've acknowledged that there have been acts of looting, vandalism and other disturbances.

On Tuesday, Rep. Young Kim, R-Anaheim Hills, introduced a resolution condemning "riots" in L.A. The resolution was signed by every GOP House member from California, including Reps. Ken Calvert of Corona, Darrell Issa of Bonsall and Jay Obernolte of Hesperia.

The resolution said protests began in response to "lawful federal immigration enforcement actions" and "quickly escalated into violent riots across Los Angeles." It states that some agitators set off fireworks, threw Molotov cocktails at officers and assaulted federal agents state elected leaders to "work with the federal government to end the violent riots and restore peace."

"Peaceful protests are a constitutional right, but vandalism, looting, violence, and other crimes are not. Protecting public safety shouldn't be controversial, which is why I am leading the California Republican delegation in a resolution to support law and order as we continue to see unrest," Kim, whose district covers parts of Orange, Riverside and San Bernardino counties, said in a statement.

"I hope Governor Newsom can come together with President Trump to stop the riots, lower the temperature, and keep our communities safe," she added.

Also Tuesday, Issa, who represents parts of Riverside and San Diego counties, emergency requests of our ICE agents who were under attack by rioters determined to block them, burn them, or even kill them as they bravely carried out their sworn duties," Issa said in a statement.

LAPD Chief Jim McDonnell has denied it took his department two hours to respond.

"When we heard that, I think anybody who's a police officer couldn't believe it, and certainly anyone with LAPD couldn't imagine how that would happen. Well, it didn't happen," he said during a Sunday press conference.

McDonnell said LAPD was not given advance notice that a federal operation would occur in that area of the city so its officers weren't pre-positioned there. Once the department received a call

Congress grills Hegseth over deployed troops

Wire reports

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth was met with sharp questions and criticism Tuesday by lawmakers who demanded details on his move to deploy troops to Los Angeles, and they expressed bipartisan frustration that Congress has not yet gotten a full defense budget from the Trump administration.

"Your tenure as secretary has been marked by endless chaos," Rep. Rosa DeLauro, D-Conn., told Hegseth. Others, including Republican leaders, warned that massive spending projects such as President Donald Trump's desire for a $175 billion Golden Dome missile defense system will get broad congressional scrutiny.

The troop deployment triggered several fiery exchanges that at times devolved into shouting matches as House committee members and Hegseth yelled over one another.

After persistent questioning about the cost of sending National Guard members and Marines to Los Angeles in response to protests over immigration raids, Hegseth turned to his acting comptroller, Bryn Woollacott

MacDonnell, who said it would cost $134 million. Hegseth defended Trump's decision to send the troops, saying they are needed to protect federal agents as they do their jobs.

And he suggested that the use of troops inside the United States will continue to expand.

"I think we're entering another phase, especially under President Trump with his focus on the homeland, where the National Guard and Reserves become a critical component of how we secure that homeland," he said.

The hearing before the House Appropriations defense subcommittee was the first time lawmakers have been able to challenge Trump's defense chief since he was confirmed. It is the first of three congressional hearings he will face this week.

Lawmakers complained widely that Congress hasn't yet gotten details of the administration's first proposed defense budget, which Trump has said would total $1 trillion, a significant increase over the current spending level of more than $800 billion. And they said they are unhappy with the administration's efforts to go around Congress to push through changes.

Spending issues that have raised questions in recent weeks include plans to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on security upgrades to turn a Qatari jet into Air Force One and to pour as much as $45 million into a parade recently added to the Army's 250th birthday bash, which coincides with Trump's birthday Saturday.

Rep. Betty McCollum, D-Minn., quizzed Hegseth on the deployment of about 700 Marines to assist over 4,100 National Guard troops in protecting federal buildings and personnel in L.A.

She got into a testy back-and-forth with him over the costs of the operation. He evaded the questions but later turned to MacDonnell, who provided the estimate and said it covers the costs of travel, housing and food.

Hegseth said the 60-day deployment of troops is needed "because we want to ensure that those rioters, looters and thugs on the other side assaulting our police officers know that we're not going anywhere."

Under the Posse Comitatus Act, troops are prohibited from policing U.S. citizens on American soil. Invoking the Insurrection Act, which allows troops to do that, is incredibly rare, but Trump has left open the possibility.

"If there's an insurrection, I would certainly invoke it. We'll see," Trump told reporters in the Oval Office on Tuesday.

Asked how he would determine whether the unrest amounted to an insurrection, Trump offered little clarity. "I mean, I could tell you there were certain areas of that, of Los Angeles last night, that you could have called it an insurrection."

The commandant of the Marine Corps, Gen. Eric Smith, told lawmakers at a separate budget hearing Tuesday that the Marines in Los Angeles have not yet been called on to respond. When asked by Sen. Richard Blumenthal, D-Conn., about the danger Marines would use lethal force that could result in injuries and deaths, Smith said he is not concerned. "I have great faith in my Marines and their junior leaders and their more senior leaders to execute the lawful tasks that they are given."

"This administration takes a very different view of that conflict," he said. "We believe that a negotiated peaceful settlement is in the best interest of both parties and our nation's interests."

Committee members pressed Hegseth on Ukraine's surprise drone attack in early June that destroyed a large number of Russian bomber aircraft. And they questioned the administration's future funding for Kyiv.

Hegseth said the strikes caught the U.S. off guard and represented significant advances in drone warfare. The attack has the Pentagon rethinking drone defenses "so we are not vulnerable to a threat and an attack like that," he said, adding that the department is learning from Ukraine and is focused on how to better defend its own military airfields.

He acknowledged, however, that funding for Ukraine military assistance, which has been robust for the past two years, will be reduced in the upcoming defense budget. That cut means that Kyiv will receive fewer of the weapons systems that have been key to countering Russia's onslaught.

"The administration takes a very different view of that conflict," he said. "We believe that a negotiated peaceful settlement is in the best interest of both parties and our nation's interests."

The U.S. to date has provided Ukraine more than $66 billion since Russia invaded in February 2022.

The panel zeroed in on funding issues, with only a few mentions of the other entanglements of Hegseth's early months. They touched only briefly on his moves to fire military leaders and purge diversity programs. And there was no discussion of his use of the Signal messaging app to discuss operational details of strikes in Yemen.

Hegseth has spent vast amounts of time promoting the social changes he's making at the Pentagon. He's been far less visible in the administration's more critical international security crises and negotiations involving Russia, Ukraine, Israel, Gaza and Iran.

He was on the international stage about a week ago, addressing a national security conference in Asia about threats from China. But a trip to NATO headquarters last week was quick and quiet, and he deliberately skipped a gathering of about 50 allies and partners where they discussed support for Ukraine.

Trump says he will 'liberate' L.A. during speech at Fort Bragg event

By Chris Megerian and Michelle L. Price
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — President Donald Trump called protesters in Los Angeles "animals" and "a foreign enemy" in a speech at Fort Bragg on Tuesday as he defended deploying the military on demonstrators opposed to his immigration enforcement raids.

Trump, in his most aggressive language yet regarding the protests, used a speech ostensibly supposed to be used to recognize the 250th anniversary of the U.S. Army to denounce the protesters while repeating his false statements about the 2020 election being rigged and attacking the previous commander-in-chief, former President Joe Biden.

The Republican president, who sees the military as a critical tool for domestic goals, has used the recent protests in Los Angeles as an opportunity to deploy the National Guard and U.S. Marines over the objections of California's Democratic governor to quell disturbances that began as protests over immigration raids. Protesters blocked a major freeway and set cars on fire over the weekend in Los Angeles, but the demonstrations in the city of 4 million people have largely been centered in several blocks of downtown.

"We will not allow an American city to be invaded and conquered by a foreign enemy. That's what they are," Trump said Tuesday.

Trump's heated rhetoric came as he's left open the possibility of invoking the Insurrection Act, one of the most extreme emergency powers available to the president. It authorizes him to deploy military forces inside his dancing to his campaign anthem of "YMCA." However, some in the audience were uneasy with parts of his remarks.

Robin Boothe, 50, works on the base as an audiology assistant. She voted for the president and said his speech was "classic Trump." However, she also found it to be too partisan, especially his comments on Los Angeles.

"I thought that was better left for a press conference than what we were celebrating today," she said.

The president also called Los Angeles "a trash heap" with "entire neighborhoods under control" of criminals and said the federal government would "use every asset at our disposal to quell the violence and restore law and order."

"We will liberate Los Angeles and make it free, clean, and safe again," Trump added.

Trump has authorized the deployment of 4,000 National Guard soldiers to the city over the objections of the state attorney general arguing that the president had "trampled" the state's sovereignty. California leaders accused Trump of fanning protesters' anger, leading crowds to block off a major freeway and set self-driving cars on fire.

Trump also announced his administration was restoring the names of seven military bases that were given the monikers of Confederate leaders until being changed by the Biden administration. Fort Pickett, Fort Robert E. Lee and Fort A.P. Hill in Virginia, Fort Hood in Texas, Fort Gordon in Georgia, Fort Rucker in Alabama, and Fort Polk in Louisiana will have their names changed back, Trump said.

Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth already brought back the names of Fort Bragg and Fort Benning in Georgia.

"Can you believe they changed that name in the last administration for a little bit?" Trump said. "We'll forget all about that."

Trump has promoted the Army's anniversary as a reason to hold the parade on Saturday, which is also his 79th birthday. Tanks and other vehicles will roll down city streets in a reminder of how the Republican president is reshaping the armed forces after returning to the White House this year.

"I think it's going to be great," Trump told reporters at the White House earlier Tuesday. "We're going to celebrate our country for a change."

Business, civic leaders condemn military response to L.A. protests

By Donna Littlejohn

A group of business, civic, government and nonprofit leaders have issued a statement "strongly" condemning the recent ICE raids in Los Angeles County and the White House's response to protests against the immigration enforcement.

The statement criticized what it called "the unnecessary and irresponsible action of the president of the United States in illegally deploying the National Guard and active-duty U.S. Marines" to respond to local protests.

"This is a clear violation of the law and of long-standing norms against the use of our military as a domestic police force," the statement, issued on Monday, said, "which threatens to politicize our military and inflame what is already a tense and difficult situation. This is a serious breach of legal tradition and the public trust."

"The issue here goes beyond Los Angeles or California," the statement added. "If the president of the United States can, without notice to the governor or without the constitutionally required request of the governor, send the military into our city, he can do so in any city in America at any time and for any reason he may conjure."

The statement made clear that the business leaders were speaking for themselves as individuals and not their affiliations. The statement was signed Bass said. She added that the curfew will be reevaluated today but that she expects it to continue for several days.

A curfew had been under consideration in recent days, Bass said during a Tuesday evening news conference, but after violence, looting and extensive vandalism that affected nearly two dozen businesses Monday night, "we reached a tipping point and declared a state of emergency and called for the curfew."

The move comes as police and other law enforcement ramped up their efforts on the ground and as protesters continued to condemn recent sweeps by Immigration and Customs Enforcement and the federal deployment of the California National Guard and U.S. Marines.

Los Angeles Police Chief Jim McDonnell said 197 arrests were made Tuesday, more than any day since the unrest began Friday. He said more officers would be added to the streets today.

The area affected by the curfew order is a loop from between the 5 Freeway and 110 Freeway, north of the 10 Freeway, to where the 5 and 110 merge. It encompasses about 1 square mile, Bass said, in a city of 502 square miles.

Residents of the area, people traveling to and from work, public safety employees and credentialed media are exempted, Bass said.

Overnight protests Monday again devolved into clashes with law enforcement and looting of downtown stores, though local officials condemned the presence of National Guard and Marine forces as over the top and politically motivated.

Protests also arose elsewhere around Southern California, with protesters also clashing with law officers in Santa Ana on Monday. Smaller, peaceful demonstrablock Marines and National Guard troops from what he called "the illegal deployment of Marines and National Guard in Los Angeles."

A California judge denied Newsom's request for a temporary restraining order and instead set a hearing for Thursday.

Federal officials told members of Congress on Tuesday that it would cost $134 million to send the troops to L.A. and defended Trump's decision to send them, saying they are needed to protect federal agents as they do their jobs.

Monday's demonstrations featured more vandalism, violence and arrests, with some protesters throwing fireworks and other objects at law enforcement, and authorities responding with tear gas and other less-lethal munitions. Some demonstrators remained on the streets into the early hours Tuesday.

A window was smashed at an Apple Store downtown during the unrest, with some items stolen and graffiti painted on the shop's windows. An Adidas store was also hit by looters, along with a jewelry store, a pair of pharmacies, a shoe store and a marijuana dispensary. The affected stores were generally in an area on or near Broadway, near roughly Seventh and Eighth streets.

Los Angeles Police Department Officer Charles Miller told City News Service one woman was arrested at the scene of the Apple Store burglary. At least two other people were seen being taken into custody by police for looting.

In all, LAPD said Tuesday that 14 arrests were made for looting, 96 for failure to disperse in the downtown area and one each for assault with a deadly weapon, resisting arrest and vandalism.

Two officers were hospitalized for medical treatment and released, LAPD said in a statement.

"When the administration started, they said that this was about crime, they were going to go after violent felons, drug dealers," Bass said. "I don't know how that matches with the scenes that we saw of people in Home Depot running through the parking lot because they were afraid they were going to get arrested."

The mayor said there might be one rally Tuesday, but didn't believe there would be a series of them. An interfaith prayer vigil, which Bass said she would attend, was scheduled for 6 p.m. to call for "peace and unifying our community and supporting immigrant Angelenos."

In a round of broadcast media interviews Tuesday morning, Bass said police will take advantage of video footage to track down people who take part in looting and ensure they are "prosecuted to the full extent of the law."

Monday was the fourth consecutive day of unrest stemming from protests over immigration enforcement raids that began Friday and have continued across the area.

Bass on Monday evening called for an end to the raids to bring an end to the nightly protests.

The mayor also called on federal officials to halt the immigration raids, blaming the White House for fueling unrest. "We need to stop the raids. They should not be happening in our city. It is not warranted, and the only thing it does is contribute to chaos. This was chaos that was started in Washington, D.C.," she said. "And again, I don't think our city should be a test case, a laboratory."

Law enforcement remained on high alert. The LAPD once again issued a

"Why do you pick up working individuals? They're not serious, violent criminals to the best of my knowledge."

He called the raids "counterproductive" and warned they were causing fear and instability in communities he represents.

National Guard units blocked off roadways in portions of the Orange County Civic Center on Tuesday morning, a day after clashes between protesters and law enforcement in downtown Santa Ana.

Military-style vehicles and National Guards troops blocked a portion of 4th Street in front of the Ronald Reagan Federal Building and Courthouse and a part of Santa Ana Boulevard in front of a federal building a couple blocks away.

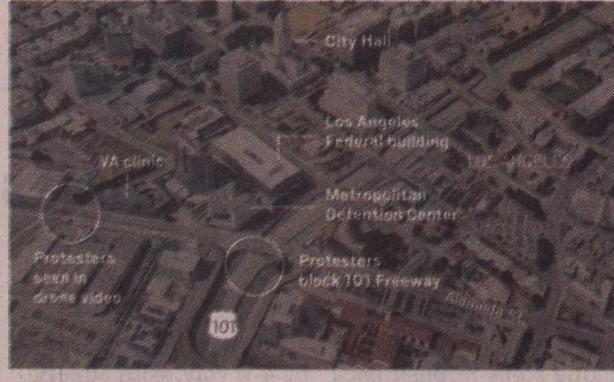

Workers were removing graffiti — most of which condemned ICE in explicit language — from government and private buildings. Some early-morning downtown visitors stopped to take photos of the military vehicles and National Guard soldiers in the normally quiet downtown area.

On Monday, reports of federal immigration authorities apparently targeting day laborers waiting for work outside local Home Depot locations sparked protests in Santa Ana. Crowds grew and eventually faced off with police.

Federal officials made the unprecedented move to deploy 700 Marines from

Five days of protests

Clashes in the Los Angeles area between federal agents and people protesting immigration raids resulted in dozens of arrests from various law enforcement agencies on suspicion of attempted murder, looting, arson, failure to disperse, assault with a deadly weapon on a police officer and other offenses. Here's a look at how the events unfolded:

FRIDAY

Morning: Department of Homeland Security agents detained several people outside a Home Depot just west of downtown Los Angeles. A little later, another raid took place at an Ambiance Apparel clothing store in L.A.'s Fashion District. During that operation, people gathered around to photograph and video the officers. A few protesters also arrived. At least 44 people were arrested.

Afternoon: Hundreds of protesters gathered outside the Los Angeles Federal Building, calling for an end to immigration raids in the city.

3 p.m.: Dozens gathered in the Fashion District after Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents appeared at an apparel manufacturer there.

6:30 p.m.: More than 100 people gathered at the immigration services building and detention center in downtown Los Angeles to protest the raids. DHS officers fired pepper balls at the protesters before the Los Angeles Police Department dispersed the crowd.

SATURDAY

9 a.m.: Border Patrol agents gathered in a gated industrial office park in Paramount, a Latino suburb south of downtown Los Angeles. Separate clashes broke out between protesters and law enforcement officers in Paramount amid rumors that immigration agents planned to raid a Home Depot in the area. Protesters kicked and threw objects at law enforcement vehicles, while officers deployed tear gas.

Later that day: Tensions escalated and the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department ordered protesters to disperse and warned they would face arrest or use of force if they did not. Officers shot tear gas canisters into the crowd as protesters retreated.

4 p.m.: Social media posts showed police and sheriff's deputies declaring the gathering an unlawful assembly and using loudspeakers to tell protesters that anyone who remained would be arrested.

6 p.m.: President Donald Trump signed a memo ordering 2,000 National Guard members to Los Angeles to protect federal officers conducting immigration operations, over the objections of Gov. Gavin Newsom and Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass.

Nightfall: Protesters and the Sheriff's Department continued to clash in Compton, across the Los Angeles River from the Home Depot in Paramount. Officers shot flash-bang grenades and rubber bullets at the protesters, who threw rocks, glass bottles and fireworks at the officers.

Evening: Protesters had gathered outside the Metropolitan Detention Center. The Los Angeles Police Department created a barrier outside the building and declared an unlawful assembly, ordering demonstrators to disperse.

SUNDAY

Early morning: Roughly 20 California National Guard troops arrived at the Metropolitan Detention Center.

10:30 a.m.: Nearly 300 members of the California National Guard took positions at three different sites around the city. More than a dozen DHS officers in riot gear joined the National Guard troops at the detention center. By early afternoon hundreds of protesters had gathered there.

1 p.m.: California National Guard, DHS and Immigration and Customs Enforcement officers formed a line and attempted to clear protesters away from the Metropolitan Detention Center. Officers deployed tear gas, pepper balls and other crowd-control munitions.

Midafternoon: Protesters spilled onto nearby 101 Freeway, blocking traffic in at least one direction before being cleared by the authorities.

6 p.m.: Protesters in the area had mostly dispersed and law enforcement officers returned to their positions near the federal building complex. A few dozen protesters remained nearby, blocking Alameda Street.

President Donald Trump on Wednesday hinted at the possibility that his latest feud with Gov. Gavin Newsom over mass federal immigration raids — and the use of military troops to protect federal buildings and agents as they carry out those enforcement actions — could affect additional wildfire aid to California.

Asked by a reporter if his latest "dust-ups" with Newsom could affect aid to help California recover from the devastating January wildfires, Trump said, "Yeah, maybe."

"Hatred is never a good thing in politics," Trump went on to say. "When you don't like somebody, you don't respect somebody, it's harder for that person to get money if you're on top."

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Israel claimed to operate almost freely in the skies over Iran during a third day of airstrikes Sunday and killed more high-ranking security figures, while some Iranian missiles slipped through Israel's air defenses. Both sides threatened to launch more attacks.

In an indication of how far Israel was prepared to go amid fears of all-out war, a U.S. official told The Associated Press that President Donald Trump in recent days vetoed an Israeli plan to kill Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei. The Iranian Health Ministry said late Sunday that 224 people have been killed since Israel's attack began Friday. Spokesman Hossein Kermanpour said on social media that 1,277 other people were hospitalized. He

Iran also said Israel struck two oil refineries, raising the prospect of a broader assault on Iran's heavily sanctioned energy industry that could affect global

Rare plant smells blooming awful, and the crowds love it

Corpse flower and its stench emerge for first time since 2021

By Christina Merino
CMERINO@SCNG.COM

Cal State Long Beach's famous corpse flower, named Phil, was in full bloom Wednesday.

The College of Natural Sciences put the plant on display Wednesday, which drew a crowd ready to witness the rare sight — and smell — of a corpse flower.

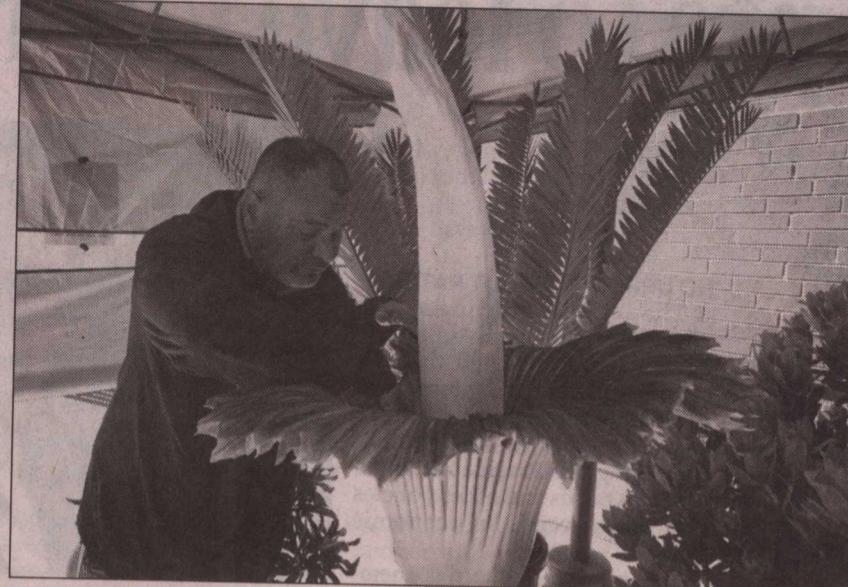

These plants, Amorphophallus titanum to scientists, go several years between blooms. This was the third time that Phil has bloomed since 2019; the previous time was in 2021.

When corpse flowers bloom — according to Brian Thorson, botanical curator and botany technician at CSU Long Beach — they produce a stench like that of decaying flesh to attract carrion beetles that act as pollinators. It also attracts curious humans — who flock to campus by the thousands when it blooms.

The first 24 hours are the smelliest, Thorson said, and by the second day, the stench is more reminiscent of "a garbage can full of crab shells in the summer heat."

The College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics will publish updates on Phil on its website and on social media.

After repeated attempts, the officials were turned away without connecting with those

"That is two generations of neglect by our political and business leaders. It is not fair to punish only ordinary working men and women for that neglect," he said. Finally, calling out President Trump by his own catchphrase, Gómez said that ideals of freedom and equality, long expressed in the Declaration of Independence, "have always been what make America great. Ours is the first nation founded on principles rooted in the Jewish and Christian scriptures, the truth that all men and women are created equal, with God-given dignity and rights that cannot be denied by any government."

Celebrations all over Los Angeles County marked Juneteenth and they all shared one thing in common: A rich sense of history.

Juneteenth marks the anniversary of Union Army Gen. Gordon Granger reading General Order No. 3 in Galveston, Texas on June 19, 1865. It began, "The people of Texas are informed that, in accordance with a proclamation from the Executive of the United States, all slaves are free."

U.S. post offices were closed and mail was not delivered Thursday. All federal offices, schools and banks were also closed.

In a packed City Council chamber led by the historic presence of the city's first majority-female Council, Mayor Karen Bass delivered a comprehensive and emotionally resonant "State of the City" address on April 21, painting a clear-eyed picture of Los Angeles' current challenges and its resilient path forward.

Council President Marqueece Harris-Dawson opened the evening with a stirring reflection on the significance of the moment.

"Today, we celebrate the city's strength... and we honor the leaders who help guide us," he said, emphasizing the importance of diverse leadership.

"I can't think of a better leader... than someone who has been weather-tested, who has seen the toughest things but stands tall every time."

Mayor Bass began her address with an affirmation of Angeleno resilience: "L.A. never gives up. LA always rises."

She led with updates on the city's rapid recovery efforts in the Palisades following recent wildfires, proudly noting that the pace of rebuilding is "on track to be the fastest in California history."

She cited water and power restoration timelines that dramatically outpaced those following previous state disasters, and proposed an ordinance to waive all plan check and permit fees for affected residents.

Bass introduced several innovations to expedite rebuilding, including a self-certification program aimed at streamlining bureaucratic hurdles, ensuring residents can rebuild their lives faster and more affordably.

The mayor also addressed the city's recent strides in public safety. Based on 2024 data, homicides dropped by 14%, with the largest decrease

Oakland Mayoral Race: Barbara Lee Accepts Victory With 'Responsibility, Humility and Love'

As a candidate for mayor, former U.S. Representative Barbara Lee released a "10-point plan" last week to reassure residents that she will tackle Oakland's most pressing challenges.

Now that she has edged out her competitors in the ranked-choice special election with 50% or more of the vote, the former Congresswoman, who represented parts of the Bay Area in the U.S. House of Representatives, can put her vision in motion as the city's first Black woman mayor.

"I accept your choice with a deep sense of responsibility, humility, and love. Oakland is a deeply divided City," Lee said in an April 19 statement.

"I answered the call to run to unite our community, so that I can represent every voter, and we can all work together as One Oakland to solve our most pressing problems."

As of April 18, Lee had secured 47,045 votes (50.0%), while Loren Manuel Taylor trailed her with 42,276 (44.9%) votes,

On Saturday evening, Taylor conceded to Lee. There are still about 300 Vote-by-Mail ballots left to be verified, according to county election officials. The ballots will be processed on April 21 and April 22.

"This morning, I called Congresswoman Barbara Lee to congratulate her on becoming the next Mayor of Oakland," Taylor said in a statement.

"I pray that Mayor-Elect Lee fulfills her commitment to unify Oakland by authentically engaging the 47% of Oaklanders who voted for me and who want pragmatic, results-driven leadership."

The influential Oakland Post endorsed Lee's campaign, commanding her leadership on the local, state, and federal levels.

Paul Cobb, The Post's publisher, told California Black Media that Lee will bring back "respect and accountability" to the mayor's office.

"She is going to be a collegial leader drawing on the advice of community nonprofit organizations and {See OAKLAND MAYOR BARBARA LEE on A-11}

California sued the Trump administration Monday over its federalization of the state's National Guard, alleging the move to deploy some 2,000 troops across the state without the approval of the governor or local law enforcement is unlawful.

California Attorney General Rob Bonta called the Trump administration's move unnecessary and said it "trampled" California's sovereignty.

If local law enforcement officials, who have been responding to wide-scale demonstrations since the federal government ramped up immigration enforcement efforts in the Los Angeles area, needed more help, then there were other steps to take to bring in that aid, Bonta said.

"We don't take lightly to the president abusing his authority and unlawfully mobilizing California National Guard troops," Bonta told reporters.

The White House said in a statement Monday that Gov. Gavin Newsom, a Democrat, "should thank (Trump) for restoring law and order."

"Gavin Newsom should march back to his Attorney General's Office to prosecute the anti-ICE (Immigration and Customs Enforcement) rioters who burned
